Florey, Howard Walter, Baron Florey of Adelaide and Marston (1898-1968), medical scientist, was born on 24 September 1898 at Malvern, Adelaide, third and youngest child and only son of Joseph Florey, a boot manufacturer from England, and his second wife, native-born Bertha Mary, née Wadham. Educated at the Collegiate School of St Peter and the University of Adelaide (M.B., B.S., 1921; M.D., 1944), Howard sailed for England in 1921 as a Rhodes scholar. At the University of Oxford (B.A., B.Sc., 1924; M.A., 1935), he studied in the honour school of physiology under Sir Charles Sherrington who became an influential guide and friend. Florey transferred in 1924 to the University of Cambridge (Ph.D., 1927; M.A., 1928), spent ten months (1925-26) in the United States of America, then worked in London.

Investigation of this kind is original in the best sense; it not only produces a substantive addition to our stock of knowledge, but gives the student invaluable training in the art of collecting and arranging his material. Adelaide, alone among Australian universities, has a specific endowment for such research, and it has borne good fruit; here is an opening for the generosity of benefactors in other States.

surprisingly large. Tho occupation is one that appeals to women for many reasons. Moreover, after a salary of £150 is reached, it chiefly rests with the individual what her prospects shall be. Tho average woman is not capable of administering a department properly, say the authorities. It is not likely that many women will become the heads of libraries; they are handicapped by various limitations; limitations perhaps of physical strength, perhaps of temperament. Still, there are only these limitations to prevent them from aspiring to the highest positions in the State, and no doubt one or two women will eventually hold such positions. "Nine out of every ten women are unfitted to be at the head of a library," remarked Mr. Anderson, the Government Librarian, "but sometimes a tenth is discovered, and she is beyond price."

There are only 111 women at present employed in the Government libraries. In various country libraries, such as at Yass, Mudgee, and Wagga women are employed. Country libraries are always circulating in kind. There should be a municipal circulating library in the metropolis, according to Mr. Anderson, instead of a lending branch at the
